Market Update

January was a strong month for the Latam Equity market, outperforming both DM and EM and recovering all of 2018 losses. Currencies were a significant part of the rally, with strong performance across the board, also supported by price recovery in key commodities for the region, such as Oil and Copper.

After a weak end of 2018, Mexico had a strong rebound, mainly driven by a risk off sentiment during the first month of the year. As such, the MXN appreciated almost 2,8% while the local equity market also gained territory. Nevertheless, Mexico still underperformed the region while remaining with attractive valuation levels. We remain cautious in Mexico until we gather further visibility in terms of the new administration and its potential impact on the economy and corporate results. 4Q18 results have been broadly in line and focus now has shifted from results to guidance.

In Brazil, optimism remains regarding the new administration and their potential ability to pass the much awaited pension reform. Valuations remain attractive considering historically low interest rates, stable inflation and unemployment. Additionally, optimism is at high levels, both for consumer and business confidence. We believe all these factors could support earnings growth during 2019.

In this context, our fund reached a 13,18% return during January, compared to +14,61% from the MSCI Small Cap Index. In terms of relative performance, our OW in Brazil had a positive impact, explained by our OW in names such as RANDON (+14,9%), our off-benchmark position in TENDA (+22,64%) and EVEN (+19,34%).

Our lack of exposure in Colombia had a negative impact, following a 4,5% COP appreciation and strong performance of CLH, CORFICOL and EXITO. Lastly, our UW in Mexico also had a negative impact, mainly due to a 2,8% MXN appreciation, and lack of exposure to VOLARIS (+41,03%) and LABB (+17,60%).
