Market Update

During April, Latam underperformed all regions, explained by higher volatility and domestic factors. On the global front USA and China's activity stabilized, the FED decided to keep the policy rate on hold, and China PMI print was slightly above 50 indicating a lackluster stabilization of GDP due to policy stimulus.

On April, Brazil was virtually flat despite volatility arising from the postponement of the original voting schedule on the SSR proposal, which was finally approved in the Constitutional and Justice Committee on April 24th. Now it will be submitted to a Special Committee in the Lower House, which could take up to 10-40 sessions, potentially bringing additional volatility. On the positive side, total estimated savings of the SSR were revised upwards to BRL$1.24 trillion over 10 years from BRL$1.07 trillion. Among other uncertainties, we highlight the government intervention on Petrobras's price increases – which was then revoked. On the macro front, economic data was somewhat disappointing, leading to downward revisions to GDP. Nevertheless, we believe corporate results still have room to improve regardless of the economic recovery, mainly on the back of lower interest rates and operating leverage.

Surprisingly, and despite neutral to weak corporate results, Mexico outperformed the region, reaching returns over 5% in USD terms, partially explained by a 2.6% MXN appreciation. On the macro front, GDP growth came in below expectations at 1.3%, while inflation reached 4.4% during April, above Banxico's target. On the political front, we highlight the approval of the Labor Reform, key to the USMCA approval, and the government's National Development plan, which continues to show its commitment to fiscal discipline, acknowledging lower oil related revenues and therefore, lower spending.

In this context, our fund reached a 0.12% return during the month, while our reference index, the MSCI Latin America ESG Leaders declined by -0.54%. This difference is explained by our structural UW in Itaú (-2.66% in USD terms) and Bradesco (-0.35% in USD terms), given the 5%/10%/40% rule and our OW in Natura (+14.02%) and CBD (+5.5% in USD). This performance was compensated by our OW in LATAM (-7.8% in USD) and Cielo (-19.82%). By country our OW in Brazil adds 0.93% to our relative performance, compensated by our UW in Chile (-0.14%).
